

Intimate partner violence versus domestic violence. In general, these terms mean about the same thing. Intimate partner violence is used to describe abuse between current or former partners. Domestic violence can include abuse from a household member (including roommates or caretakers), intimate partners (including dating partners) or a family member (whether or not they live with the victim).